Q: We are an adoption agency and a significant number of those we serve are children and youth in foster care. I assume they would be considered low-income. They are not part of a family.

A: The organization must include any income that is received for the foster child. The foster child is counted individually, and the household income is not considered.

Q: Our agency provides direct services to our population. However, we also provide community education at health fairs and hand out program brochures. We spend approximately five percent of our revenue each year providing community education. Our direct service clients are under 300% of the federal poverty guidelines. Do we need to count our health fair participants?

A: Many organizations hand out flyers to educate the community; those clients do not need to be counted. All clients must be counted if they are participating in a program, such as attending educational classes. However, at least 50 percent of the clients served must be low-income and at least 50 percent of the revenue must be used to provide services directly to low-income clients.

Q: How do we count the number of clients served? Our organization has clients that received services in multiple programs.

A: If an individual received more than one type of service, only count the person once – this an unduplicated count.

Q: Do we count households or individuals?

A: The total number of clients served is based on the individual receiving services. However, the household income and total number of people in the household is used to determine the low-income threshold. The federal poverty guidelines chart is used to determine the income level for the household.
